Abstract: The type specimens and related specimens of the families Cerambycidae and Disteniidae (Coleoptera) deposited in the Museo Argentino de Ciencias Naturales «Bernardino Rivadavia» (Buenos Aires) are listed. Two lists are added: of type specimens mentioned as deposited in the Museum, but not found there, and of specimens labelled as types but not mentioned in the original descriptions. Specific names are alphabetically entered. All labels of the type specimens are transcribed and described. The following specimens are also recorded: specimens labelled as types deposited in other institutions; specimens not labelled as types but whose locality and other data agree with the original descriptions; specimens without type labels and localities (coll. Burmeister) or without type labels (coll. Bruch) whose typical condition is unknown or uncertain. The bibliographical references include type localities, number of specimens mentioned, collection dates, name of collectors, and the sex when stated. Nomenclatural changes (synonymies, new combinations) are also included. Neoclytus aulai Bruch, 1911 is transferred to Mecometopus Thomson, 1860.

Key words: Coleoptera, Cerambycidae, type specimens, Museum collections, Argentina.

The collection of the Entomological Division at the Museo Argentino de Ciencias Naturales «Bernardino Rivadavia», Buenos Aires, is one of the oldest and the largest in Argentina. It was started by Hermann Burmeister in 1862, and continued thereafter by Carlos Berg, Juan Brèthes, Angel Gallardo, Carlos Bruch (Gemignani, 1939), Manuel Viana and Axel Bachmann. The entomological collection comprises a general collection, including the personal ones of Axel Bachmann, Everard Blanchard, Fernando Bourquin, Adolfo Breyer, Juan Brèthes, Arturo Frers, Eugenio Giacomelli, Félix Lynch Arribáizaga, Antonio Martínez (only holotypes and allotypes), José Pastrana, Glorinaldo Pellerano, Augusto Pirán, and other minor collections. The collections of Hermann Burmeister, Carlos Berg (in part), and Carlos Bruch were kept in their original condition. Since 1983, Axel Bachmann started registering the type specimens deposited in the collections. The types belonging to species of Coleoptera are all registered, but only partially published (only Hydrophiloidea).

In the case of name-bearing types, the following criteria were adopted: if only one specimen was mentioned in the original description it is the holotypus; if there are several specimens (mentioned or not in the original description) they are syntypi; if one typus + several cotypi were mentioned, the typus is the holotypus and the cotypi are paratypi; if several typi exist, they are syntypi; if several typi + several cotypi were mentioned, the typi are syntypi and the cotypi are paratypi; if only cotypi were mentioned, they are syntypi. If the original author did not mention how many specimens he used and only one is in the collection, this is considered as a Syntype, eventually "Sole Syntype" (ICZN, Rec. 73F). The original names are entered, followed by the current systematic position (subfamily and tribe), following Monné & Giesbert (1995). The type localities, as mentioned in the original publications, are recorded; details are added in square brackets [ ] that allow the correct identification (amount of specimens, sex, dates, collector, place where they were deposited). Under material examined (ME), the specimens actually housed in the Museum are mentioned, copying and describing their labels. Lines on the labels are separated by a bar (/), anverse and reverse by a double bar (//). Under further specimens the following are mentioned: first, further specimens of the typical series housed in other institutions, as mentioned by later revisors and/or taken from published type lists (Zikán & Wygodzinsky, 1948; Cabrera & Fernandez, 2000; Julio et al., 2001); second, those specimens not labelled as types, but whose locality and other data agree with the original descriptions, and put after those labelled as types in the entomological boxes or drawers, but whose type condition is unknown or doubtful, as the total amount was not originally mentioned; third, specimens without original locality and type labels (coll. Burmeister) or without a type-label (coll. Bruch), whose relationship to the typical series is unknown or uncertain. Burmeister almost never mentioned the amount of specimens seen, but mentioned all the localities, and did not use type labels. The specimens which follow the labelled ones may or may not pertain to the original series, may come or not from the same localities, or may have been put in the drawer later by Burmeister or by Berg.

The valid name is mentioned beneath (in the case of synonymies), together with the author of the synonymy, as well as further new combinations and their authors. Some references with mentions of species of Cerambycidae by their synonymies are also included. In a few cases bibliographical sources were not seen, so the last reference mentioning the synonymy or the new combination was used (Monné & Giesbert, 1995). Some names have a long and/or complex nomenclatural history, e.g. those of some Compsocerini; for these only the most important references are mentioned.

In several cases of type specimens in the Bruch collection some data of the original descriptions do not agree with the labels: 1) the date in the description is slightly different, e.g. 10-VIII-1895 vs. 10.12.1895; 2) the locality given in the description is more restricted than that on the label, e.g. Tafi Viejo vs. Tucumán; 3) the locality on the label differs from that in the description, here treated as mislabellings (specially in some Clytini, see Di Iorio, 1995b); 4) the collector's name is given in the description, while the printed label bears Bruch's name only.

The present contribution comprises a list of specimens of the families Cerambycidae and Disteniidae (Coleoptera), ordered in the following manner:

I. Specimens labelled as types that agree with the dates of the original descriptions (ME) and further specimens.

II. Type specimens not found but mentioned as housed at the MACN.

Note: Mislabelling of the locality was discussed by Di Iorio (1995b: 336), who had expressed doubts about the correct generic placement of this species. The globose prothorax, almost totally pubescent, without longitudinal ridges on the pronotum, and the parallel margins of the elytra, meet with the characters of Mecometopus Thomson, 1860. According to this, Mecometopus aulai (Bruch, 1911) comb. nov. is proposed.

Note: Galileo (1987b: 603-608) says the typical localities include also Bahía Blanca [1 male, col. G. Günther], and Pampa Central [2 males, MACN], while the specimens from Córdoba are 3 males, and probably deposited in the MACN. Bruch (1908) refers only to one specimen from Córdoba collected by Schulz. Thereafter he mentions further specimens from Bahía Blanca and Pampa Central, which differ somewhat from the type. It follows that he did not intend to design them as types. The specimen from Pampa Central [2 males] were not found in the MACN. The collection G. Günther is unknown to us, but a specimen of Prionapterus staphylinus from Bahía Blanca, ex coll. Günther, is kept in the Bruch collection.
